spirals to the surface once again for air and life. I climb through the surface of water, then shoot my body across the waves to the safe maroon edge of wet, red sand.

I slowly raise my body in defiance to the sea. I stand for a moment proud to have won the battle. Then I see the green tinted glass, and beyond the green forest which waits for me. One more note of music, full chorded, my right arm reaching out, my body lunging forward with cat-gut breaking strain for what I may receive . . . the vision . . . there is no more and that is enough.

"as brilliant a master of the short story as Maugham or Chekhov"—
Saturday Night

"We're lucky that John Metcalf chose to live and write in Canada."—
Robert Weaver

"His subtle magic is to move the reader emotionally, as each of these pieces manages to do, with the fewest possible words. That they are, in this collection, the impeccably right words is both a measure of Metcalf's craftsmanship and a tiny tour de force."
—Jack Scott, Victoria Daily Times

"Metcalf's prose is meticulous, his ironies are embedded solidly in the style, and his characters exist in terms of an imagined background which is very surely realized by implication in even the shortest of the stories."—
Douglas Barbour, The Edmonton Journal
